received it?

A. I looked through my paperwork, some old formulas to see if I had anything that went back into that, you know, that far, and really had nothing at that time to discuss the specific subject matter. There were discussions of pigmented adhesives, there were discussions of different types of projects, but not specifically that say dark pigmented adhesive, clear flock transfer printed.

Q. Did you undertake the record search which Intermark requested in this August 14, 2002 form letter?

A. Much as I just described. We looked through -- you know, I looked to see what we had, and I'm talking back at American Finish, primarily, and also somewhat at Noveon. My records at Noveon at that time only went back a few months.

Q. In your search of the American Finish and Noveon records, did you find any evidence of the use of dark pigmented adhesive on clear flock fabric which had been transfer printed prior to July 31 of 1992?

MR. CASS: Object to the form of the question.

A. As I previously stated it, when we did our search we found nothing that specifically described in our work notes that project, in those words.

BY MR. GRIMM:

Q. After your search, did you turn over any documents to Intermark or its attorneys?

A. Back at that time?

Q. Yes.

A. I think we may have showed them some notes or discussed some notes in our lab books, and they didn't feel that that specifically showed anything, so I don't think we actually photocopied or sent anything at that time. I don't remember exactly that we did.

Q. When did you discuss the American Finish lab notebook with Intermark's attorneys?

A. I'm not sure that I ever spoke specifically to the attorneys about the lab notebook.
