2 campaigns, to include presidential campaigns on the 3 Democratic side. Did you generally have a sense that they 4 represented, that their political law practice had a
5 Democratic clientele?

6 MR. BAKER: Maybe I should have, but I didn't 7 really understand it at the time.

8 MS. TERZAKEN: Is that right?

9 MR. BAKER: I did not, no.

10 MS. TERZAKEN: Okay.

11 MR. BAKER: I came to understand, you know,
12 that, that Perkins-Coie was playing a role with respect to 13 the DNC hack. But the, the extensiveness of their 14 contacts with the Democratic Party, I did not, at the 15 time, have an understanding about, that I recall.

16 MS. TERZAKEN: Okay.

17 MR. BAKER: Just back up, also on Bower and the 18 other guy. Sitting here today, I don't recall having any 19 conversations with them, just to be careful. I don't 20 think I've even met either one of them in person. But, -.

21 MS. TERZAKEN: Okay. With Michael Sussman, your 22 conversations with him before the election, if you could 23 briefly describe how the conversations came about, what 24 information he provided to you.

25 MR. BAKER: So, I'll go into the Sussman stuff, yeah, okay. So he came in, he, he, all of this is gone

1 over in the transcript with the committee, so I won't,
2 I'll try to just summarize briefly.

3 My basic recollection is, in some way, shape, or 4 form, Michael reached out, and wanted to come in and meet 5 with me. And so we scheduled that. So Michael came in 6 and met with me. And he had some amount of information, 7 physical evidence, printed out, and also a thumb drive or 8 two, that he said related to strange interactions that 9 some number of people that were his clients, who were, he 10 described as I recall it, sort of cyber-security experts, 11 had found about some strange connection between some part 12 of Donald Trump's organizations and Alfa Bank, which was 13 described as being controlled by the Kremlin. And that it
14 appeared to be the case that this was a, it was, it, it
15 was surmised that this was a back-channel, what do you
16 call it, a back-channel of electronic communications.
17 That, that somehow the Trump organization and Alfa Bank
18 were using this, what looked like a, basically a 19 surreptitious channel to communicate with each other.

20 And so he presented me with this information. I 21 listened to him. I, you know, took the information from 22 him, and I think immediately called up, I believe it was 23 Priestap, and I either went down to Priestap, or he sent 24 somebody to get it, but I got it out of my hands, like, 25 you know, that afternoon or that day, whatever it was.
