

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

v.

MITCHELL BOSCH,

Defendant.

Crim. Action No. 24-210 (DLF)

MOTION FOR CONTINUANCE

The Defendant, Mitchell Bosch, cannot receive a fair trial in the District of Columbia (“D.C.”) six days from today due to the heightened public emotion and highly publicized media attention surrounding yesterday’s presidential election, which resulted in the re-election of Donald Trump. Notably, 92.4% of the D.C. electorate voted for Vice President Kamala Harris, with only 6.7% voting for President-elect Donald Trump.¹

I. Procedural History

On July 22, 2024, Mr. Bosch filed a Motion to Change Venue before this Court, arguing that he could not receive a fair trial within this jurisdiction due to the presumptive prejudice of the D.C. jury pool. ECF No. 24. On August 21, 2024, the Court denied Mr. Bosch’s motion as premature, and granted leave to renew the Motion at the time of jury selection. Mr. Bosch hereby incorporates the arguments made in his Motion and supplements them in support of a Motion for Continuance of the November 12, 2024 trial date.

II. Argument

The re-election of the former president cannot be disentangled from the facts of Mr. Bosch's case. First, the events of January 6, 2021, stemmed from the belief of some individuals, including the former, and now President-elect Trump, that the 2020 election was fraudulent. Just three days ago, President-elect Trump continued to indicate he believes the 2020 election was stolen, making national news headlines when he stated at a political rally that he "shouldn't have left" the White House back in 2021.² Last month, President-elect Trump also characterized January 6, 2021 as a "day of love", doubling down that protestors came because "they thought the election was a rigged election."³ Moreover, President-elect Trump has publicly and repeatedly stated that he will pardon individuals convicted of offenses stemming from January 6, 2021.⁴

In response to these statements, the need to protect democracy was raised repeatedly by Vice President Harris's campaign, as well as advocacy organizations. Over the past several months, numerous political ads played on television and various internet platforms showing violent scenes of January 6, 2021, and warning that a re-election of Donald Trump would result in the degradation of democracy.⁵

Mr. Bosch understands that the President-elect's proclamations of stolen elections and pardons for patriots are not relevant evidence in his trial. However, they are highly relevant to the ability of the jury pool to be fair and impartial. If jurors believe that the President-elect is a threat to democracy, that he does not take the events of January 6, 2021 seriously, and that he will pardon those involved that day, there is a real and significant possibility that, in their aversion to those views, they will punish Mr. Bosch or use this case to send a message that they disagree with the President-elect. At a minimum, there is a high risk that they will be unable to be clear minded and focus solely on the evidence before them, in the wake of an emotionally charged election which occurred exactly one week before jury selection.

The risk of jurors within the District of Columbia being tainted by the electoral results and accompanying news coverage is greater than any other jurisdiction in the country. First, as Mr. Bosch argued in this Motion to Change Venue, the fact that January 6, 2021, took place in D.C. makes the emotional connection, and accompanying risk of bias, around those events significantly greater. Second, what we now know from voting data is that voters in D.C. overwhelmingly voted against President-elect Trump, with 93 out of every 100 voters casting their ballot for an alternate candidate. This stands in stark contrast to even the most "liberal" leaning states whose vote tallies are currently in. In New York, for example, Vice President

Harris received 55.8% of the vote, with President-elect Trump receiving 44.2%.⁶ In Vermont, Vice President Harris received 64.4% of the vote, with President-elect Trump receiving 32.6%.⁷ In nearby Maryland, Vice President Harris received 60.2% of the vote, with President-elect Trump receiving 37.3%.⁸

News coverage in D.C. highlights these concerns. A local NBC affiliate interviewed numerous D.C. residents talking about their outrage at the election's outcome.⁹ One individual, choking back tears, commented "'We are in trouble. We're just in trouble...The entire thing has been emotional to me because I have lived my life in service to others and so, and so, yes, it is.'" Another commented "I'm disgusted by this country if I'm being honest." A local radio station, WTOP, sought reactions in the community, "Darren from Dupont Circle told WTOP the election results left him with a sleepless night and a sense of dread. 'I'm exhausted behind these sunglasses. I have cried. I have had, like, many panic attacks. And it's this fear: This is (Trump) is back,' he said, adding he's encountered a similar mood of sadness and misery among people he had seen Wednesday morning. His message to other Americans who had planned of a different outcome: ‘We all need a minute. Everyone will process this differently. We all know trauma and grief. Everyone is going to process this differently. Check on your friends, check on your loved ones.’”¹⁰ These interviews support the grave concerns raised by Mr. Bosch about the impartiality of a jury pool in D.C. in this moment.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, Mr. Bosch respectfully moves the Court to grant Mr. Bosch a continuance to allow a reasonable amount of time for the emotions of the D.C. electorate to subside in the wake of yesterday’s presidential election.
