Subject: RE: Helicos v. PacBio, et al.: Protective Order

Derek,

This is unacceptable. The defendants have been dragging their feet on the protective order for over two months now. This has prejudicially delayed the production of documents in this litigation, and the normal progression of discovery. It is clear now that PacBio's self-serving tactics have been orchestrated to delay discovery to buttress arguments in its motion to stay.

I first contacted you on Tuesday to propose times this week to discuss the protective order. You were aware of your scheduling conflict with your firm retreat at that time, yet you did not respond to me until Thursday, when you were already at the retreat. As a courtesy and per your request, we proposed alternative times to discuss the protective order on Monday, yet the defendants apparently need more time. Indeed, there is no guarantee that defendants will be available next Wednesday or Thursday, as you surmise that these days "will hopefully work better" for the other defendants. This is unduly prejudicial to Helicos, and we will not stand for defendants' delay tactics any longer.

We plan to call Judge Thynge by 3:00pm EDT on Tuesday, May 3, to schedule a teleconference on this issue unless the parties have met and conferred before then. Please let us know by noon EDT on Monday, May 2, if and when defendants are available for that meet and confer.

Regards,
Blake

Blake:

As I explained, we are at a firm retreat this week. We will need the early part of next week to discuss a few outstanding issues with the other defendants. We suggest you propose some times on Wednesday and Thursday for a teleconference, which will hopefully work better for the other Defendants as well.

Derek

Blake:

We are out of the office today and tomorrow at a firm retreat and can't participate in a teleconference during the times you suggest. However, to give you a brief status update, the Defendants are working to prepare a revised draft. Could you please propose to the Defendants some times for a teleconference next week, at which point we should have more information?

Thanks,

Derek
